BOOKS TO READ

MONGOLIA:

When the Great Deep Ocean was a pool,
When the loftiest Mountain was a hillock,
When the first tree was a sapling,
When the Adult Lord was in his cradle,
When Dayan Deerh was only a cave...
You were existing and blessing...
Shoog, shoog Hairhan
(Darhad/Huular Shamanist invocation)

The Desert Road to Turkestan by Owen Lattimore

Setting off to rejoin his wife for their honeymoon in Chinese Turkestan, Lattimore was forced to contend with marauding troops, a lack of maps, scheming travel companions, and blinding blizzard. Luckily he had with him not only his father's retainer, Moses, but a team of camel pullers and Chinese&Tibetan traders he had assembled to teach him the ropes about their mysterious and now extinct way of life. Lattimore's gifts as a linguist and his remarkable powers of observation lend his chronicle an immediacy and force that has lost now of its impact in the decades since its original publication. Tents in Mongolia (Yabonah): Adventures and Experiences Among the Nomads of Central Asia by Haslund, Henning

In a diarist's style, the author describes the 1923 Danish Krebs Expedition to explore Northern Mongolia for the purpose of establishing "a farm for corn, horse and cattle raising." Among other comments, the author describes conditions after having been captured by Soviets. He was set free by arguing the case for peace. "We wanted peace and understanding between nations and races, and not hatred and blind fanaticism."
